This supplements DENSO's Amended Part 573 Report of April 20, 2021 (20E-085) concerning the fuel pump assembly issue on certain Toyota and Honda vehicles.

This recall affects certain vehicles equipped with specific low pressure fuel pumps with an impeller which may become deformed under certain conditions which could render the fuel pump inoperable.

DENSO sells low pressure fuel pumps of similar but not identical design and construction to other vehicle manufacturers. The vehicles of the other vehicle manufacturers possess different fuel delivery systems, engine configurations, and other variables. DENSO is cooperating with other vehicle manufacturers' investigations. Recently Honda made safety recall notification and implemented a safety recall (21V-215) for certain Honda vehicles for a particular period. Thus, DENSO is amending its Part 573 Report for this recall (20E-085) to add the Honda vehicles (population of 628,124) to the affected population. Additionally it was learned by DENSO that Toyota amended safety recall (20V-682) to include certain vehicle models (revised population of 1,525,742).

Part No. :

Amended to: See attached file "Amended Part No list"

Chronology :

Amended to add:

December 2020- Toyota amended safety recall notice (20V-682) to include additional vehicle models.

March 2021- Honda filed a safety recall notice (21V-215) to cover additional Honda vehicles that were not included in its earlier recall notices.

DENSO sells low pressure fuel pumps of similar but not identical design and construction to other vehicle manufacturers. The vehicles of the other vehicle manufacturers possess different fuel delivery systems, engine configurations, and other variables to those Toyota and Honda included in its recall. DENSO is cooperating with other vehicle manufacturers' analysis.
